

Published: December 31, 2006

NAMES & FACES

NAMES & FACES: How to make 2007 the ultimate year of your life

December 31, 2006

BY JOHN SMYNTEK

FREE PRESS STAFF WRITER

Expensive splits

Now this is a magazine! The winter 2007 issue of O2138, "the magazine for the Harvard sensibility," features some of the powerhouse Crimson grads who have been unlucky in love and are paying for it!

- The Aga Khan faces a settlement of up to $1 billion in his divorce from his wife of eight years, Inaara Khan, from whom he reportedly has been separated since 2003. The German princess, also a former pop singer, may be entitled to as much as half the estimated $1.8 billion the horse breeder-philanthropist-descendant of Muhammad reportedly made during the marriage, plus some of his future earnings.
- Staples founder Tom Stemberg ended his marriage to Dola Hamilton Stemberg in 2005, soon after his girlfriend, Katherine Chapman, gave birth to their son. Dola Stemberg accused the office-supply tycoon of substance abuse and squandering the family fortune on Chapman's Canadian shoe business. Press reports said that she could seek stock worth tens of millions of dollars and property on Beacon Hill and in Buzzard's Bay. That split came after Tom Stemberg's 1987 divorce from first wife Maureen Sullivan Stemberg, who received around 500,000 shares of Staples stock worth $2.25 each.
- Breaking up was also hard to do for Viacom and CBS chairman Sumner Redstone, whose divorce from Phyllis Redstone became final in July 2002. Sumner Redstone faced heat not only from his wife of 52 years, who demanded $3 billion after hearing of the mogul's jaunt to Paris with another woman, but from his son, Brent Redstone. Earlier this year, Brent Redstone filed a lawsuit claiming that his father transferred a multimillion-dollar company-owned suite in Manhattan's Pierre Hotel to Phyllis Redstone.